ANNA, UNION CO., III., April 29, 1863.

At last I have plenty of news concerning the Copperheads of Southern Illinois. For nearly a year I have kept you posted regarding the treatment to which Union men have been subject; and I add that within the last few months matters have grown so much worse that not only have large, fine orchards belonging to Union men been ruined, and other property destroyed, but they have been sassanited, beaten, mained and some so much so that they can but be cripples for life. This in Union county. You have printed the account of the attempt to arrest two deserters in Jonesboro, the county seat, of the mob whick caused their release by threatening to hang the officers, and the marder of Mr. Welsh, who assisted them, by the mob. This was on the 15th. Since then several Union men are reported to have been hung by this Jonesboro mob; and it is certain that one of them, Mr. Neeley, was shot by Mr. Nash, and it is the house of them, Mr. Neeley, was shot by Mr. Nash, and reached Anna, one mile from Jonesboro, to which place they proceeded, but when they arrived every man of the town, containing 1,200 inhabitants, had field, and they could do nothing. They returned the same night to Cairo. But the next day they came up on the regular passenger train at 3 o'clock p. m., and going over at once, they surrounded the messes art of the town before the alarm was sounded, and at once proceeded to make arrests. ANNA, UNION Co., Ill., April 29, 1863.

was sounded, and at once proceeded to make arrests.

They took possession of the Court House, and no one was allowed to leave the town. The time of harvest—for everything, be it good or evil, has its harvest—had clearly come. It is proper to remark here that it has long been known that there are only three Union men in this town. One is the Postumaster, one John Dougherty, and one a mechanic.

About twenty of the principal men were sent to Cairo, and day before yesterday something like the same number were added. They will be forwarded to Columbus, Ky., where they will be forwarded to Columbus, Ky., where they will be tried and sentenced, or furnished transportation into Diske, where they belong. They include the business men of the town, and their miserable, drunken, negro-hunting, swearing, foul-mouthed bangers—on. Some of the former are wealthy, and the physicians and lawyers are well represented.

Among others is the keeper of the fall, the Rev. J. N. Albright. He is the precious individual who figured some time since as the claimant, or some such character, of a fugitive at Ottawa, in this State, which affair mide a great stir at the time. He is a Methodist preacher, and since the war, in sermon and conversation, has bewalled the hard lot of his Southern brethren, forced to fight for their rights. There are several very big fish in this net, but as it is not yet clear what is to be their fate, I will not speak of them at present. DOLE'S BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

LY WORLD ACCORDING With a species of despair, why Government did not be greater to going through the country and picking up more, it is impossible to tell how many willse "forced from home and all its pleasures."

There is conething very remarkable about the case and certainty with which the officers seize upon the right man; for instance: they meet a Butternut and ask him fils name is "So." he says no. "Very well, weath you." "What fur?" "You come along." "But I want to see my wife." "Did n't you ever see her?" "In course I have." "Well, come along, and shat up."

What fur?" "You come along." "But I want to see my wife." "Did n't you ever see her?" "In course I have." "Well, come along, and shat up."

So far as I can learn the facts, it appears that while the Union men were living, with their lives and property in the greatest jeopardy, and wondering, with a species of despair, why Government did not provide the country, but sub-ordinate to the Order of the Golden Circle, and with the avowed object of accertaining two things: one, of knowing who the Union mere were and taking their names, and the "To., and in lavor either of the South or a Northwestern Confederace.

During the progress of the principal men of the country were subscribed to it in their own hand. When I add that those papers, by some process, of which I know nothing what-ever, have got into the hands of the county were subscribed to it in their own hand. When I add that those papers, by some process, of which I know nothing whatever, have got into the hands of the Union authorities, it is seen how easy it is to fix upon the right men.

The following is the condition of the people through the county: One sees men riding horses at full speed along quiet roads, and with guns on the shoulders. Formerly runaway slaves used to fix up lodging places in woods, or in caves, where they stopped to rest a few days, or for the night. Many of these identical lodges are occupied by the men who formerly bunted them. They band themselves together and live in large barns, keeping watch night and day, and have guns always loaded. But when the soldiers come, they fice, if possible; they dare not shoot. Some sleep in hollow logs, others cannot sleep anywhere. Often one comes across a dozen or more camping in remote valleys.

Amid this terror, Union men and their families are at peace: and not more quiet are birds in this retore.

ies are at peace: and not more quiet are irds in their nests while the storm rages.

BATTLE OF CAPE GIRAR-DEAU.

Attack of Marmaduke with 10,000 Men!—The Place Defended by Brig, Gen. John MeNiel with 2,000 Men for Pive Hours!—The Enemy Repul-sed With Great Slaughter! Cape Girardeau, Mo., April 27, 1863.

CAPE GHARDEAU, Mo., April 27, 1863.

The fight commenced about a mile and a half back of the town, between Shelby's Brigade and the 1st Regiment of Nebraska Infantay, under Lt. Col. Baumer, a German officer of great merit, who held three regiments of rebel infantry in check for an hour, when he was obliged to fall back within the protection of the batteries. In this preliminary engagement, the 1st Nebraska troops, led by their brave Lt. Col. and by Capts. Ribble, Major, Gillete, Potts, Lawlor, Provost, and Curren, displayed a most determined bravery, and the skill of veteran troops. The beginning of the battle took place about 10 o'clock, a.m., on the Jackson Road, in an open field, near a piece of woods from which the rebels emerged to the attack in large numbers, supported by a field battery. The 1st Nebraska fell back a short distance to a small piece of timber, where they were supported by the 1st Wisconsin Cavalry, under Lt. Col. Pomeroy, and by the 2d Missouri battery.

From this time (about 11 o'clock a.m.) the statle became a severe contest between the artillery of the respective forces, until 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the enemy retreated from the field, and the battle ceased, with great loss on their side and small loss on ours.

The artillery of the gnemy was posted in with great loss on their side and small loss on ours.

The artillery of the enemy was posted in the edge of the woods, and in the roads leading to the town, about one mile beyond the contermost fort, named B.

Our own batteries were planted on hills about laif a mile beyond the fort, and that much nearer the enemy. These were Wellfly's and the 2d Missouri Batteries, commanded by Leuts, Jacoby and Zepp. The artillery of Fort B was commanded by Col. Daniel Huston, and the entire force of artillery was commanded by Capt. Meisner, Chief of Artillery on Gen. McNell's staff. The several batteries were supported by detachments of the 1st Nebraska Infantry, and the 32d Iowa Infantry. Their firing was splendid throughout the battle, their shot and shell going straight to the mark. At almost every discharge you could see the rebel cavalry fail from their lorses.

On passing over the battle ground afterward, I saw one fellow lying with a ghastly wound from a cannon ball in his left breast, cold and siff with clenched hands, a horrible expression of ignorance and depravity on his countenance, and near by, two flue white horses, lying dead, the latter with far more innocence in their faces than their human horses, lying dead, the latter with 1ar more innocence in their faces than their human companions.

In one instance we saw some rebel officers come into an open field, as if for the purpose of selecting a position for a battery. They were not able to remain two minutes on the ground, so well directed were the shot and shell from our cannon to the spot where they stood. In the size and calibre of our ordinance we had great advantage. The siege guns of the fort were 24-pounders, and several of our pieces 12-pounders, and several of our pieces 12-pounders.

The enemy threw nothing larger than 6 pound balls, spherical and obloug. Their-cannon, however, were rifled, and their balls flew a great distance. They generally passed over our heads, and some of them reached the town. We saw many of them picked up after the battle. Very few of their shells burst. Their fire began to slacken about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. Ours continued wherever a trace of the enemy could be seen, till 3 o'clock, when the battle ceased.

A large brick residence, in which some of the enemy took shelter, bears the mark of our cannon balls. One large hole through the kitchen could be seen a mile off.

In one place, within an area of a few acres, seventy-five dead horses were said to have been counted, and in many places dead men were found, whom the rebels were not able to carry off the field. Many, however, were carried away, their blood having stained the ground.

Two of their wounded officers fell into our Two of their wounded officers fell into our hands, Maior Blackman and Adjutant Edwards of the 1st regiment of Shelby's brigade. They represent our fire as having been very destructive to them. They knew personally of five of their line and field officers being either killed or wounded. The whole number of their killed is estimated at sixty, and READY—(Official) The United

of their wounded 300. Owing to the great disparity of their forces and ours, Gen. McNeil did not pursue them, and so they had time to take away most of their dead and wounded. In one instance they charged upon one of our batteries, but were driven back with slaughter. The Union forces had every advantage in position, were well armed, well managed, the batteries were admirably handled, the siege guns from the powerful fortification (a high eminence overlooking the whole field) were fired with great precision, so that a more decided victory was gained, with small loss, and the rebel hordes from Arkaneas were terribly repulsed and driven from the suburbs of the city. Our whole loss is six killed and as meny wounded.

The rebels had counted on an easy victory. They had summoned the surrender of the place with great pomp, pretending to do it by order of Maj. Gen. Sterling Price, who, I suspect, was not within one thousand miles, and had offered Gen. McNeil a half hour to make up his mind. In the reply, conveyed back by Col. Strahan, Volunteer Aid to the General, the Colonel claimed that they should credit Gen. McNeil with twenty-nine minutes, as he had decided in just one minute to hold the post himself. Their defeat is undoubtedly a terrible disappointment and humiliation, for they had a double purpose in view. *

They not only expected to make great capital out of the capture of Cape Girardeau, and raise the hopes of rebeldom and the Copperheads of the North, but they were also bent on plunder. Their army, as represented by Maj. Blackwell and Ady't Edwards, is destitute of provisions, and they expected large supplies and great spoil at Cape Girardeau. As it is, they have robbed the farmers' houses in the vicinity, but they will scarcely take anything away out of the country, should they be so fortunate as to escape with their lives.

In this battle Gen. John McNeil displayed his accustomed bravery. He was cool, collected, and determined, vigilant day and night, taking but little sleep, and seeing to it that all his plans, in their utmost details, were executed. He knew that a great stake to his country and himself res'ed on the issue. To have lost Cape Girardeau, an important military position in Missouri, and midway between Cairo and St. Louls, and immediately opposite to Southern Illinois, would have been a great disaster; and for John McNeil to be taken a prisoner would, as he said, have left Mrs. McNeil a widow, and his children fatherless.

The Southern Confederacy has set a price upon his head, for his prompt execution of their guerilla bands in Missouri, and to get him into their possession would afford them an opportunity of glutting their vengeance, which they are not likely soon to obtain, for Gen. McNeil will never be taken by them alive.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS. The value of the real and personal property of the seven States where alone taxes could, for the present, be collected by the rebels—according to the last census—is $8,001,000,000. Now the rebel chiefs propose to raise by taxes over four hundred millions in the present year, on this property, much of which consists of negro slaves and real estate, both unproductive now. They propose to seize one tenth of all the property of the South for taxes, that is to say. It is easy to see that this is impossible.
